

We seek to improve the quality of adult education in Scotland, and the Glasgow area in particular, by undertaking leading-edge, internationally-competitive adult education research and development, while offering a challenging student-centred learning environment. As the adult education arm of a leading international university, we bring global knowledge and practice to local and national adult education, aiming also to sustain and add value to Scottish culture and society, to the natural environment and to the national economy. We are one of the world's largest providers of university-level adult education, with an annual recruitment of 7000 students at all levels from pre-undergraduate to doctoral, and are engaged in constant curriculum development. We host a dedicated Centre for Research and Development in Adult and Lifelong Learning (CRADALL), and have been engaged in a number of projects related to curriculum and skills development of adults and their trainers internationally.
